

The Colorado Historic Hot Springs Loop is comprised of five premier destinations, each bringing their own sizzle to the geothermal journey. These facts only tell part of the story; for complete immersion, guests must remember to pack their sense of adventure.

Five premier hot springs destinations in western Colorado—Chaffee County, Pagosa Springs, Ouray County, Glenwood Springs, and Steamboat Springs—have come together to form the Colorado Historic Hot Springs Loop. This 720-mile loop showcases some of the most popular hot springs attractions in the country. There is so much variety; from intimate private baths, to the world’s largest mineral hot springs pool. Each of the 19 facilities offers unique features like vapor caves, hot pots, terraced pools, enormous travertine formations, and fun-filled aquatic centers.

Chaffee County

Sitting on the eastern side of the Rocky Mountains, Chaffee County is home to majestic views and outdoor adventures. Between Salida, Nathrop, and Buena Vista, there are many recreational activities and opportunities. Sitting in Chaffee County, ‘Collegiate Peaks’—the mountain range of with more 14,000-foot foot peaks than any other Colorado county—is perfect for hiking and backcountry exploration. In summer visitors can enjoy whitewater rafting and kayaking down the Arkansas River, while winter guests can make tracks on Monarch Mountain. After adventure-filled days, tourists and locals alike seek out nearby several hot springs, which are ideal for soaking in any season in Chaffee County.

Ouray and Ridgway

The scenery in Ouray County is among the most iconic of Southwest Colorado, with vast mountain vistas and deep canyon trenches. Often referred to as “the Switzerland of America,” Ouray and Ridgway welcome visitors with friendly and charming downtown districts filled with locally-owned shops, breweries, coffee roasters, chocolatiers, restaurants, performing arts venues, and countless opportunities for experiential adventures. Victorian buildings adorn the town and dazzling scenic byways crisscross the region, exploring the area is easy through hiking, biking, climbing, and Jeeping. There are several local attractions worth noting, including historic Native American trails and mining roads, wildflower meadows, and the Ouray Ice Park in the winter. Amid the adventure, the five local hot springs hit the spot.

Pagosa Springs

Surrounded by the Weminuche Wilderness and the San Juan National Forest amid the majestic San Juan Mountains in Southwest Colorado, Pagosa Springs offers visitors a rich geological and cultural history to explore. Known for its world-famous hot springs, “Pagosah” is the Southwestern Ute word for “healing waters.” With its official designation as the “Deepest Hot Springs Aquifer in the World,” the Mother Spring supplies three downtown hot springs locations. In addition, the soaring cliffs, ragged peaks, magical alpine pools, undisturbed wilderness, and cascading rivers reveal a dramatic geological history that invites voyagers, young and old, to venture into Pagosa Springs’ backcountry.

Overview: Thermal spring water that contains 34 minerals and trace elements flows through the cave floors via narrow channels at a simmering 125°F (52°C) to create the underground geothermal steam baths at Yampah Spa & Vapor Caves. The Ute Indians used the vapor caves for purification rituals when they inhabited the area. Many people claim a steam in the vapor caves has the uncanny ability to ward off impending colds and other minor illnesses. Body treatments, combined with a steam in the caves or a Natural Geothermal Thermal Mineral Bath, have long been a favorite activity for couples and friends visiting Glenwood Springs.
